Language attitudes are evaluative reactions to different language varieties. They reflect, at least in part, two sequential cognitive processes: social categorization and stereotyping. First, listeners use linguistic cues (e.g., accent) to infer speakers' social group membership(s). Second, based on that categorization, they attribute to speakers stereotypic traits associated with those ...

Defining Power and Status. Expert consensus is clear: Power is asymmetrical control over resources, and status is social prestige (2, 3). Inequality is not just about power (resources) but also about status (respect) (). Their empirical independence appears in several findings: Power per se makes people less just, but status (especially without power) makes people more just ().
