I'd lay a purple carpet of wild heather in the dells And fringe the edge of all the woods with their pretty lilac bells. I'd merge the bracken with the heather, mix their colours like the sea, A green and purple ocean on my own rich tapestry. Then I'd take a ball of soft, white wool and stitch a mass of daisy chains

Krákumál or the Lay of Kraka is a skaldic poem, consisting of a monologue in which Ragnar Lodbrok is dying in Ælla's snake pit and looks back at a life full of heroic deeds. It was composed in the 12th century, almost certainly in the Scottish islands. It is composed in a kind of háttlausa in 29 stanzas, most of them with ten lines. Thomas Percy was the first to translate the poem into ...

When a father first lays eyes on his little girl, he loves her more than anything on this earth. When a daughter grows older, her father is the first man she will love. And the last one her father will have trouble letting go of. In her eyes he is the closest thing to God; in her eyes he is a king.
